Yale-New Haven Teachers Institute®

Since 1978, the Yale-New Haven Teachers Institute has offered high-quality, content-based professional development for teachers in New Haven Public Schools. Institute Fellows participate in a seminar led by Yale faculty and create a curriculum unit tailored to the needs of their students to be published on our website.

teachersinstitute.yale.edu

Who are we?

The Yale-New Haven Teachers Institute is a partnership between Yale University and New Haven Public Schools. We offer seminars in the humanities and STEM led by Yale faculty and our program runs from late February to June.

Who can participate?

K-12 teachers of English, History, Languages, Arts, Science, and Mathematics in New Haven Public Schools are encouraged to visit our website to learn how to apply.

What is an Institute seminar?

Institute seminars feature collegial group discussions of common readings led by a Yale faculty member. They meet weekly on Tuesdays at 4:15pm on the Yale campus from May to June.

Yale-New Haven Teachers Institute®

Scan this code to learn more about how to participate

What is a "curriculum unit"?

All Fellows must write a curriculum unit on a topic related to their seminar subject. Each unit contains content objectives, teaching strategies, and classroom activities.

How do I apply?

Teachers interested in applying should visit the "Participate" page on our website for more information.

Why participate?

Fellows develop a curriculum unit designed specifically for their students, deepen their content knowledge, increase their sense of professionalism by working collegially with Yale faculty and fellow teachers, receive a $3,500 stipend, and have their units published on our website.

teachersinstitute.yale.edu/participate